Respect, leadership action fuel success

Each and every day here at Travis Air Force Base, California, I am inspired by incredible people performing nothing short of miracles as if they were routine.

Far from perfect and constantly facing ambiguity, risk, complexity and even frustration, our teams of heroes consistently deliver exceptional results to keep our mission moving...projecting American Power is not easy. It takes deliberate thought and work to forge people of character, cohesive teams, and an energizing pride in a warrior ethos to ensure mission success.

The fuel driving this success is respect for people and leadership engagement.

Those who lead in a mindful and engaging way visually demonstrate two key characteristics embraced by well-studied, high reliability organizations; sensitivity to operations and deference to expertise. This engagement of a leader, at the place where operations happen, is not only a mindful journey to learn, but also a direct investment in our people.

Imagine what can be realized if leaders at all levels can make this a daily habit. Imagine the shift in culture, understanding and clarity of purpose if we could invert our organizational charts: where the leader is the key and most visual supporter of the teams of people in one's charge. Done with an open mind, curiosity, and a skilled coaching style, this purposeful demonstration of respect and deference to our experts forges those magic ingredients of empowerment and trust.

Frontline experts are heard, demonstrate in real-time organizational challenges and successes, and communicate needs as well as goals. Both leaders and heroes learn together answers to questions like, "Why?" and "What can I do to help?" At David Grant USAF Medical Center, the mantra of "Trusted Care Begins with Me" is a commitment to our patients and our teams as we aim to heal, protect and train heroes. Team Travis shows so many other great examples throughout the base. Our wing commander and command chief's regular engagement in the Works with Airmen program, the maintenance group's "Stripes On the Line" initiative, our Honorary Commanders' program, civic leader engagements and many others throughout our entire team. All this effort is aimed at a clear, predictable and undeniably reliable performance in safety, quality and mission effectiveness.

We embrace incredibly difficult challenges each and every day both here at Travis and throughout the world. Our mutual success depends on all of us to galvanize a culture fueled by respect and engaged leadership. Regardless of rank or position, can I count on you to exercise a questioning attitude, embrace a respect for people, and take responsibility to ensure you are engaged as leader? As a follower and expert, can I count on you to speak up, solve problems, and respect all with whom you work? Only the most consistently focused, supported, empowered, respected, innovative and reliable teams can be successful in crushing our nation's enemies and caring for our friends as we execute combat and non-combat missions alike.

Thank you, Team Travis, for all that you do and represent. I remain inspired. Stay relentless, make great decisions and continue to treat others like heroes deserve. No bounds.

Travis Airman focused on becoming RPA pilot

As Staff Sgt. Richard White talked about his childhood dreams of becoming a pilot and mentions hearing planes fly overhead, the roar of one from the Travis Air Force Base, California, flightline buzzes above us.

"It's pretty crazy to think I work on those planes now, like that one right now," he said with a smile. "That's probably where it started, just seeing these giant things in the air."

White, 60th Maintenance Group maintenance operations controller, is stepping closer to his dream. White will soon learn if he's made it through the board phase of qualification to fly remotely piloted aircraft.

White is one of several enlisted Airmen from the 60th MXG who applied to become such a pilot. The process involves several rounds of testing before reaching the phase White has. The field narrows from hundreds of applicants to more than 30 along the way.

Enlisted Airmen are being considered for the program, which is a departure from typical Air Force policy, that used to limit piloting to officers.

Other Travis maintainers who applied include Staff Sgt. Michael Richardson, Staff Sgt. Joshua Cintron Ruiz and Tech Sgt. Kyle Dedeaux. Richardson has since left for his next assignment.

Tech. Sgt. Caleb Woolman, 60th MXG maintenance operations controller assistant section chief and White's immediate supervisor, said after taking the test, White, Cintron Ruiz, Dedeaux and Richardson came back to the shop discussing the differences in the test and compared notes.

"The test was one of the toughest I've ever taken, so I guess I will have to find other ways to benefit the Air Force," said Dedeaux, 60th Aircraft Maintenance Squadron crew chief. "The experience was awesome and I highly recommend attempting it to all of my subordinates."

Of the four Airmen, only White proceeded to the next field of applicants, which he estimated includes approximately 300 Airmen.

For White, a native of Antioch, California, becoming an RPA pilot is one step in part of a larger picture for his career. He is also pursuing a move to Officer Training School, which he intends to pursue if he becomes an RPA pilot or not.

"Sergeant White is a very self-motivated individual," said Master Sgt. Rusty McRaney, 60th MXG maintenance operations controller section chief. "He takes care of himself. He takes care of everyone around him. He's always looking out for other people."

'Take pride in what you bring to the fight'

A couple of weeks ago, I had the opportunity to attend a Basic Military Training graduation at Joint Base San Antonio-Lackland, Texas. It had been about 20 years since I stepped foot on the BMT parade grounds.

I was truly amazed at the pride the military training instructors and their teams displayed during the ceremony as we accepted more than 900 new Airmen into our U.S. Air Force.

As Airmen we sometimes forget

Chief's Commentary

the pride we had when we first came into the military. Pride can be viewed from many different angles in our Air Force culture. Duty and appearance are a couple of things that come to mind when referring to Air Force pride.

Duty performance is a primary focus in today's Air Force. Our Airmen perform a wide range of duties and functions that require a great deal of training and attention to detail, but how many of our members actually get some form of satisfaction from their own achievements? Having pride in our work is essential to fostering a more energized workplace. When Airmen feel such positive energy, they are more likely to want to come to work and do a great job. I can honestly say that our Airmen at Team Travis do amazing things across this base. We as Airmen need to recognize our own specialized qualities and skills that contribute to our mission. What we do on a day-to-day basis is not "just a job." Take pride in what you bring to the fight, we all have something to brag about. Be bold and confident about showcasing your skills and don't be afraid to own it.

Less than 1 percent of Americans have the privilege of wearing a military uniform. Do you

Base welcomes new batch of honorary commanders

Senior Airman Amber Carter
60TH AIR MOBILITY WING PUBLIC AFFAIRS

Twenty-one community leaders were scheduled to be inducted Feb. 2 during the Honorary Commanders Change of Command Ceremony at Travis Air Force Base, California.

The ceremony was scheduled after the Tailwind's production deadline Feb. 2.

The honorary commander's program was developed to encourage and exchange ideas, experiences and friendship between key members in the local area and the Travis military community.

"I am looking forward to building additional relationships with base leaders, finding ways to honor and involve them within our schools and to further enhance interaction with and honor of our military personnel and their families," said Janet Fogh, 60th Air Mobility Wing Chaplain's new honorary commander and Vacaville Christian School High School and Middle School principal. "Supporting the military community is a life-long passion and this opportunity will enable further involvement and opportunity to do so."

Honorary Commanders serve a two-year term. During their term they are given tours and invited to different events to gain a complete understanding of the Travis mission.

"I love the program and the base so much," said Jamil Zainasheff, 60th Maintenance Squadron's current honorary commander as well as president and chief executive officer at Heretic Brewing Company in Fairfield, California. "It is a tremendous honor and opportunity to connect with the people in our Air Force. This program has shown me what service to your country means and made me want to be a better person."

Col. John Klein, 60th Air Mobility Wing commander, hosted the event and greeted the group of more than 130 commanders, honorary commanders and civic leaders who attended the ceremony at the Delta Breeze Club.

"Here at Travis, we pride ourselves to rapidly project American power anytime ... anywhere," said Klein. "It is these enduring local partnerships, like the Honorary Commanders Program, that support our vision to serve locally and are vital for our mission execution."

Klein encouraged new honorary commanders to be active in the program.

"Have pride in your new role," said Klein. "A strong relationship with your unit will make this program a success and will enrich the bonds between our communities."

The 21 Honorary Commanders who served their two year term were thanked by Klein for becoming an active member of the military community.

"You are now Team Travis alumni," said Klein. "You will forever be a part of the Travis family and I hope the bonds you made with your unit will continue to thrive."

He gained 30 pounds during his wife's first pregnancy. He lost 20 and was working on the last 10 pounds when he learned at Christmas that his wife is pregnant with their second child.

This time around, Staff Sgt. Randall Loeschner, 60th Inpatient Operations Squadron, has a plan to stay on track despite having "pregnant foods like pizza in the house."

Loeschner is enrolled in the "Better Body Better Life" program offered by the nutritional medicine clinic at David Grant USAF Medical Center at Travis Air Force Base, California.

Following a recent class, Loeschner explained that he already knew "a lot about nutrition," but is finding that's not the case with some Airmen he works with as a unit physical training leader.

"They didn't grow up with this (information). They don't know what is a 'good fat' or what foods are considered proteins," said Loeschner.

One of the most important elements of the BBBL program is learning to set smart goals.

"They force me to look at the way I'm eating and hold myself to those standards," said Loeschner.

BBBL is a hands-on five week series focusing on nutrition, physical activity and behavioral issues that promote healthy living. Classes can be taken in order or as a participant's schedule allows.

"The purpose of this program is to help people change their whole lifestyle," said Capt. Jeffery Perry, 60th Diagnostics and Therapeutics Squadron chief of outpatient nutrition.

BBBL participants identify personal goals and devise plans to meet them. Perry said he's watched some participants go from being disorganized to preparing meals ahead of time and from being inactive to exercising daily.

Participants get weighed and measured at the beginning of each class although the goal for some participants isn't weight loss.

"Some people just want to improve their diets."

— Capt. Jeffery Perry

"Some people just want to improve their diets," Perry said.

Classes are small (eight to 10 students) so participants have time to interact with one another and share their successes and failures.

"We provide a lot of information about changing behaviors, like looking at portion sizes," said Senior Airman Bryan Metcalfe, 60th MDTs. As a BBBL instructor, Metcalfe also covers topics such as nutrient dense foods, emotional eating, dining out and reducing stress.

In addition to helping participants make better food choices, the BBBL program encourages participants to get at least 150 minutes of vigorous activity weekly.

"We talk about different types of activities and how to set up a regimen," Perry said. "We encourage people to use the fitness resources available at the fitness center and to discuss with their doctor any health concerns before attempting any strenuous physical activity program."

BBBL classes are held from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. Tuesdays and from 9 a.m. to 11 a.m. Thursdays. The program is open to all Tricare beneficiaries.

Active-duty members who sign up at the Airman and Family Readiness Center website can earn five Leadership Pathways credits when they complete the program, Perry said.

Nutritional medicine also offers classes for people at risk for high cholesterol and high blood pressure as well as nutrition classes for people with diabetes. For more information or to enroll in any of the programs, call the clinic at 707-423-7867.

JOINT BASE SAN ANTONIO-RANDOLPH, Texas — The Defense Department will implement the new Blended Retirement System in less than a year. While no one needs to make a decision until Jan. 1, 2018, all Airmen should take advantage of training and informational resources to research their options during 2017.

Airmen eligible for the new BRS will begin receiving email notifications in February from myPers to ensure they receive correct information regarding their benefits to make the decision best suited for their individual needs.

The Opt-In course is designed to provide sufficient information for eligible Airmen to make an educated decision about their retirement

WRIGHT-PATTERSON AIR FORCE BASE, Ohio — The Air Force has awarded a $2.1 billion contract to Boeing for the third Low Rate Initial Production lot of KC-46A Pegasus tankers.

This award includes 15 aircraft and associated spare parts. The first two production lots for seven and 12 aircraft respectively were awarded in August 2016. This award brings the total number of tankers purchased by the Air Force to 34.

“This program is moving forward at a steady rate,” said Brig. Gen. Duke Z. Richardson, the program executive officer for tankers. “We are getting aircraft on contract and moving them down the production line, meeting test requirements, and preparing for ‘iron on the ramp.’”

The first aircraft delivery is scheduled for McConnell Air Force Base, Kansas, which is the first active-duty Air Force operating location for the Pegasus. That delivery will be followed by BAGRAM AIRFIELD, Afghanistan — “For anyone that has ever been in and gotten out, I don’t know that you ever stop feeling that pull to come back. That you ever stop missing it.”

For newly-promoted Master Sgt. James Dullaghan, an HH-60 Pave Hawk crew chief with the 455th Expeditionary Aircraft Maintenance Squadron, that pull brought him straight to a recruiter’s office – for the second time.

“I first came on active duty in November 1978,” he said. He initially served for 10 years on active duty as a wideband equipment specialist. Twenty years after leaving active service, Dullaghan re-enlisted as an Air Force reservist in February 2009.

Dullaghan didn’t stray far from his Air Force roots during his break in service – he has worked on the space shuttle program and unmanned rockets at Cape Canaveral and the Kennedy Space Center in Florida for the last 28 years. His Reserve duties allow him to continue working in the space program.

Twenty years after separating from the Air Force, he had a discussion with a co-worker that made him think about the value of serving and spurred him to action. Dullaghan went to the recruiter’s office the next day.

He is now a dedicated crew chief deployed with his unit to Bagram Airfield, Afghanistan.

“Because of my break in service, I had to retrain and I went to tech school with a bunch of 18 and 19 year olds,” Dullaghan said, laughing. He was 50 years old at the time. “I was older than all of my instructors, but they were cool about it.”

Initially his instructors didn’t believe him – when determining who the class leader would be, the instructors asked each E-5 what their date of rank was.

“Sept. 21, 1981,” Dullaghan replied.

Thinking he was joking, the instructors gave the position to another NCO. It was only later they discovered that Dullaghan had served before some of them were born.

At Bagram, Dullaghan and his unit maintain the 83rd Expeditionary Rescue Squadron’s

SCOTT AIR FORCE BASE, Ill. — United States and Coalition forces in Afghanistan are working to advise, train and assist Afghan security forces across the country. At places like Jalalabad Airfield in the country’s far-eastern Nangarhar Province, they recently called for a shipment of vehicles to support their ongoing work with their Afghan partners.

Getting those much-needed vehicles came with a catch.

Jalalabad Airfield’s runway is so narrow, the C-130 and C-17 Globemaster IIIs are the only AMC aircraft that can land at the airfield. Because of the requirement to bring in multiple vehicles on each sortie, the C-17 was required and they would have to back up and take off in the same direction they flew in.

The aircraft would also have to land in the middle of the night and take off again before the sun rose.

No problem. The 816th Expeditionary

Airlift Squadron’s C-17 Globemaster crews dropped off the much-needed vehicles Jan. 16, 2017. It took the crew only 70 minutes to land, drop off the cargo, back up and take off again – all on an airfield that hadn’t had a C-17 land on it since 2010.

Pararescueman awarded Air Force Cross for valor

24TH SPECIAL OPERATIONS WING

HURLBURT FIELD, Fla. — Fifteen years after a 17-hour battle on an Afghan mountaintop, a pararescueman’s extraordinary heroism was recognized with an Air Force Cross, upgraded from a Silver Star, following a service-wide review of medals awarded since 9/11.

Then-Tech. Sgt. Keary Miller – against overwhelming odds and a barrage of heavy fire from al-Qaeda militants – dashed through deep snow into the line of fire multiple times to assess and care for critically wounded U.S. service members, March 4, 2002.

Miller was previously awarded the Silver Star medal for these actions, Nov. 1, 2003. The Air Force Cross is the service’s highest combat medal for valor, second only to the Medal of Honor.

“We are blessed to have Airmen like Keary in the Special Tactics community,” said Col. Michael Martin, the 24th Special Operations Wing commander, who directed training for Miller’s pararescue team before their deployment in 2002. “In an extraordinary situation, Keary acted with courage and valor to save the lives of 10 special operations teammates. This medal upgrade accentuates his selflessness despite an overwhelming enemy force...although Keary may humbly disagree, he belongs to a legacy of heroes.”

Miller was deployed from the 123rd Special Tactics Squadron, an Air National Guard unit based in Standiford, Kentucky. During the mission, he was the Air Force combat search and rescue team leader assigned to a U.S. Army Ranger quick reaction force.

“I would describe Keary as a dedicated pararescueman –

AF responds to hiring freeze

Secretary of the Air Force Public Affairs

WASHINGTON — The Air Force is working with the Defense Department to provide additional guidance on the federal civilian hiring freeze implemented Jan. 23.

According to the official memorandum, the hiring freeze applies to all executive departments and agencies regardless of the sources of their operational and programmatic funding, excepting military personnel. Exemptions may be permitted to meet the national security mission and public safety responsibilities or to prevent essential services from interruption. During this freeze, contracting outside the government is not permitted.

The appointment of federal employees who began work on or before Jan. 23 will not be affected and those with existing "firm" offers with effective dates on or before Feb. 22 may proceed. The Air Force Personnel Center will provide individual notices to those directly affected by this freeze. This will include those individuals who received job offers prior to Jan. 22 with a confirmed start date after Feb. 22, or in some cases, no start date.

The official memorandum calls for the implementation of a long-term plan to reduce the size of the federal civilian workforce through attrition. This plan is to be submitted within 90 days by the Office of Management and Budget in coordination with the Office of Personnel Management.

"Our civilian force is absolutely critical to our readiness and mission, we are taking every step to ensure we get this right," said Lt. Gen. Gina M. Grosso, the deputy chief of staff for Air Force manpower, personnel and services. "Our team has been working closely with OSD to draft clear Air Force guidance on implementation and hiring freeze exemptions. As of today, we have not received the final DOD guidance memorandum, which we believe will contain some relief in critical mission areas. Once the DOD guidance is released, we will provide the field with detailed guidance on exemption processing to ensure the most swift and effective method to request needed relief."

The civilian workforce makes up 26 percent of the total Air Force and is currently staffed at 96 percent with more than 179,000 positions filled.

A-10 pilots, Army brigade combat teams train

A pilot from the 74th Fighter Squadron waits to take off Jan. 24 during Green Flag-West 17-03 at Nellis Air Force Base, Nev. The 74th FS brought 12 A-10s to GFW in support of a joint, large-force, combat readiness exercise for close air support integration training.

23RD WING PUBLIC AFFAIRS

NELLIS AIR FORCE BASE, Nev. — Pilots from the 74th Fighter Squadron prepared for future deployments while participating in Green Flag-West 17-03 from Jan. 13-27 at Nellis Air Force Base, Nevada.

GFW is an air-land integration exercise that gives Air Force pilots a chance to conduct realistic close air support in a joint training environment designed to mirror the current conditions present in overseas contingency operations.

“Green Flag is a big exercise where we get to train with a lot of Army assets that we don’t normally work with,” said Air Force Maj. Michael Dumas, the 23rd Fighter Group chief of standards and evaluation. “We’re supporting an entire brigade combat team, more than 4,500 guys, and being involved in that kind of large force exercise is really great training for us. It’s especially important for our younger guys who have never been exposed to this kind of integration.”

Air Force 1st Lt. Kyle Singletary, an A-10C Thunderbolt II

pilot from the 74th FS, is on his first large-scale exercise with the squadron.

“I think Green Flag is preparing us well because we get to see what the Army would actually look like on the ground in a deployed environment,” Singletary said. “We get to see what close air support is supposed to be doing in a large-scale battle and the associated difficulties that come along with it, like battle tracking, finding targets and flying alongside artillery fire.”

“These are the scenarios we try to simulate back home in our training,” Singletary continued. “So the main difference, and the real benefit of coming out here, is that it’s all real.”

An added benefit of the realism inherent with an exercise this size is an extra challenge called battle tracking, keeping track of the targets as they move and react to friendly force movements.

“It’s a pretty cool problem to have because it’s very difficult for us to simulate back home,” Dumas said. “It’s the same training every day, so we all know where the targets are. Here, there’s a bunch of stuff on the ground and you don’t always know what it is. Providing close are support while working through the uncertainty of finding the friendlies to protect and the targets to kill is really important practice for when we go to support Operation Inherent Resolve.”

The friendly forces and targets alike are on the ground at the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, California, where the Army conducts pre-deployment certification training and according to Army Capt. Zachary Busenbark, the 357th Ground Liaison Detachment, 4th Battlefield Coordination Detachment ground liaison officer, realism is the name of the game.

fleet of HH-60s which conduct personnel recovery operations into hostile environments.

Working on aircraft has been a lifelong dream for Dullaghan. Though his recruiter and father recommended the electronics career field when he first enlisted in the 70s, Dullaghan knew he always wanted to “turn wrenches.”

What truly drew him back was the relationships he developed while serving.

“It was a family, and that’s the stuff you always miss,” Dullaghan said. “There’s a brotherhood here that you can’t find anywhere else. I know there are guys that I haven’t seen in 30 years, that if I were to get a hold of them again, it’s like we were never apart, we wouldn’t skip a beat.”

This time around is no different.

“This is the guy or the gal that I can put my back up against and they’ve got me and I’ve got them,” he said about the men and women he works with day in and day out.

system. However, Airmen are highly encouraged to discuss their personal situations with a personal financial counselor at the Airman and Family Readiness Center. The training (course number J3OP-US1332) is now available via Joint Knowledge Online and takes approximately two hours to complete.

Only those active Airmen who, as of Dec. 31, have served fewer than 12 years, or Reserve Airmen who have accrued fewer than 4,320 retirement points, will have the option of electing BRS or remaining in the legacy retirement system. These Airmen will be required to take the Opt-In training and should provide a copy of the JKO training certificate to their unit training manager upon completion.

The Air Force recommends BRS training for all Airmen and encourages them to take either the Opt-In course or the BRS Leader Training on JKO (course number J3OP-US1330). Many leaders may not be eligible to opt-in to BRS themselves, but still need to be knowledgeable about the new system to understand what their junior Airmen should know as they prepare to make their decisions in 2018. The leader training course is also available to those without a Common Access Card – to include family members – via an alternate website.

Travis competes for AF-level award

Base wins against Air Mobility Command, now up for food service award for second consecutive year

1) Sam Simmons, 60th Force Support Squadron, restocks food Jan. 25 at the Sierra Inn Dining Facility at Travis Air Force Base, Calif. The facility was named Air Mobility Command's best and now competes at the Air Force level for the Hennessey Award, which recognizes excellence in food service.

Tech. Sgt. James Hodgman
60TH AIR MOBILITY WING PUBLIC AFFAIRS

The Sierra Inn Dining Facility at Travis Air Force Base, California, is Air Mobility Command's Region 2 nominee to compete for the John L. Hennessy Trophy.

The Hennessy Trophy is presented to the best food service program in the Air Force and each major command nominates a base to compete. Travis will compete for the honor for a seventh time and will represent Region 2 for the second straight year. Region 2 covers a large geographic area beginning west of the Mississippi River and stretching to Asia.

"Being nominated to compete for the Hennessy Trophy is a great honor and shows that we are part of an elite group of superior performers," said Tech. Sgt. Ginger Bell, 60th Force Support Squadron dining facility manager from Radcliff, Kentucky.

"Our No. 1 priority is our customers and we take great pride in our work. This nomination validates what we already know...that we perform with excellence every day," said Bell.

Senior Master Sgt. Robert Lombardi, 60th FSS sustainment services flight superintendent

"I'm extremely proud of our 85-member food service team for all of their hard work to ensure mission success at Travis."

— Senior Master Sgt. Robert Lombardi

from Ludlow, Massachusetts, said his Airmen enable Travis to be successful.

"We provide food service to 26,000 Travis military and family members so they can focus on the mission," Lombardi said. "I'm extremely proud of our 85-member food service team for all of their hard work to ensure mission success at Travis."

Excellence is the hallmark of the Hennessy Trophy. According to the Hennessy Award website, the program's focus is promoting excellence in customer service and food service support within the Air Force. Achieving success in the competition is a reflection of pride, commitment and motivation to be the best.

Airman 1st Class John Greedy, 60th FSS food service member from Santa Clarita, California, said he hopes the Travis community realizes the significance of what the Hennessy Trophy represents and encourages people to experience eating at the Sierra Inn.

"This is a prestigious award because if we win it, we'll know that we are the best," Greedy said. "Just simply being selected to compete is a demonstration of our performance level."

"We feed the base and provide a safe environment and high quality food," he added. "Come into our dining facility and experience excellent service."

In 2016, the Sierra Inn Dining Facility provided nearly 400,000 meals to three facilities on base supporting three wings including the largest air mobility wing in AMC. The facility also oversees an inventory valued at $480,000.

The John L. Hennessy Award was established in 1957 and is the oldest military food service award. The award is named after John L. Hennessy, a hotel and restaurant executive who led a special Hoover Commission Task Group advisory of military food service and commissaries board to improve military food service.

2) Staff Sgt. Michael Thiessen, 60th Force Support Squadron, prepares hash browns Jan. 25 at the Sierra Inn Dining Facility at Travis Air Force Base, Calif. 3) Tech. Sgt. Arnulfo Valdez, 60th FSS, moves a pallet of food in the storage area Jan. 25 at the dining facility. 4) Airman Eileen Rodriguez-Berumen, 60th FSS, retrieves food from a cooler Jan. 25 at the dining facility. 5) Don Wise, 60th FSS, places meat in a tray Jan. 25 at the dining facility. 6) Airman 1st Class Zachary Wilson, 60th FSS, prepares grilled cheese sandwiches during lunch Jan. 25 at the dining facility.

How to beat Str8ts – Like Sudoku, no single number can repeat in any row or column. But... rows and columns are divided by black squares into compartments. These need to be filled in with numbers that complete a 'straight'. A straight is a set of numbers with no gaps but can be in any order, eg [4,2,3,5]. Clues in black cells remove that number as an option in that row and column, and are not part of any straight. Glance at the solution to see how 'straights' are formed.

Clinical study seeks volunteers from Air Force

FALLS CHURCH, Va. — In partnership with the Coriell Personalized Medicine Collaborative, recruitment has begun for Phase II of the Air Force Medical Service Personalized Medicine Clinical Utility Study. The aim of the study is to evaluate the utility of genetics and genomics in clinical care.

Phase I of the CUS took place from 2011 to 2013 and enrolled more than 2,100 AFMS personnel to provide education and training on the delivery of genetic risk information. Phase II expands enrollment beyond the AFMS to reach across the Air Force. Recruitment events will take place at many Air Force facilities in the next 18 months with the goal of enrolling 4,500 new study participants. Online enrollment is also available. This study is approved by the Air Force Research Laboratory under protocol number FWR20110046H. Visit usaf.coriell.org to learn more about the Coriell Personalized Medicine Collaborative and the AFMS Personalized Medicine CU. — Air Force Retiree Services

Woolman said White's experience in aero repair would help him with the skills he needs to fly an aircraft, such as banking, rolls, pitch, yaw and more.

"He already understands how a lot of the stuff operates," said Woolman. "He's worked on it. He's touched it. He's felt it."

White felt the same. "It can do nothing but help you when you're flying through the air," he said.

White said the most difficult part of the process was dealing with the anxiety he felt before and after the test.

"Going in there, it was nerve-wracking," said White.

After taking the test, he waited to learn how he did, but felt he performed well on it.

Now, he faces a review board before moving on to the final stage of the process. The board results are expected later this month.

remember the last time someone approached you and said, "Thank you for your service?" Wearing the uniform should give Airmen a sense of pride. Our civilian population recognizes the sacrifices we make in serving this great nation. Maintaining your uniform and how you represent yourself in uniform only covers a small piece of the pie. Taking pride in your physical environment is important as well. We all have a responsibility and duty to maintain our present surroundings whether it be our workcenters, units, dorm rooms or base facilities. Most people establish their first impressions within a matter of minutes. Taking pride in your environment speaks volumes and sends a direct message to others. Nothing beats unit pride in a squadron along with personal pride in your own area of responsibility. Let their first impression be your best impression. I challenge you all to think about the pride you have in your daily activities in your unit and also the pride you have in being an American Airman. First impressions can sometimes be the last impression. Our goal is to leave a lasting positive impression for others to emulate. Remember, you are not just representing yourself, but the USAF. Aim high and embrace your Air Force pride.

Valor

dedicated to his craft and dedicated to the motto "That others may live." That's how he defined himself and that really defines his actions that day," said Lt. Col. Sean McLane, the 123rd STS commander, who was a second lieutenant in Miller's home unit during that time. "We have a proud legacy and a tradition of valor, and Keary is a big part of that."

On March 4, 2002, his team was tasked to support a joint special operations team on a mountaintop called Takur Ghar, occupied by Al Qaeda forces— an engagement commonly known as the Battle of Roberts Ridge after the first casualty of the battle, Petty Officer 1st Class Neil Roberts.

One of the most significant events in recent Special Operations history began when a joint special operations team attempted to infiltrate Takur Ghar, which held a well-fortified and concealed force. The ensuing battle would result in the loss of seven special operations team members.

"We were notified there was a missing aircrew and we were launching a team to go find them," said Maj. Gabriel Brown, a Special Tactics officer, formerly an enlisted combat controller. "It was unknown who exactly was missing, but we loaded up two helicopters full of Rangers and the (combat search and rescue) package, which included me, Senior Airman Jason Cunningham [pararescueman] and Keary, who was my team leader."

As the quick reaction force helicopter made its approach over the landing zone, they were struck by rocket propelled grenades at close range—they returned fire with mini guns, but the helicopter impacted the ground hard, lurching into the snow.

"Once we landed, 7.62mm rounds ripped through the fuselage—the daylight popping through, smoke aglow; then the rotors decelerated to a grinding halt," Brown said. "Immediately, we had several casualties; I remember seeing two Rangers face down. Keary and I were deep in the aircraft—and we made eye contact and shared kind of a 'here we go' moment."

The team disembarked from the aircraft to combat the blistering fire of a waiting enemy. At great risk to his own life, Miller moved through the snowy terrain, crossing into the line of fire on several occasions in order to assess and care for critically wounded servicemen.

"I saw Keary taking action on the wounded, worried about collecting the casualties and triaging them," Brown said, who was in charge of aircraft communications and precision strike. "He was careful in his thoughts and actions, conducting himself calmly and coolly—relaying the casualty information to me all morning."

As the battle continued, Miller collected ammunition from the deceased to distribute it to multiple positions in need of ammo, moving through heavy enemy fire each time.

"I was listening to the updates as they were coming in; I was so proud because my friends were on that mountain and their future was so uncertain but they were rocking it—they were doing everything right," McLane said, who was listening to real-time satellite communications of the battle. "It's like, these guys might not make it off this mountain, but by God, they're going down swinging."

When Cunningham was killed during another attack, the casualty collection point he was at was compromised. Miller assumed Cunningham's role—providing medical aid under fire to the wounded—and braved enemy fire to move the wounded to better cover and concealment.

"I wholeheartedly believe the Air Force Cross accurately represents Keary's actions that day," said Brown. "I know those lives were saved that day were because of his efforts within that environment... the steps he took to ensure they made it off the battlefield."

Miller is credited with saving the lives of 10 U.S. service members that day, and the recovery of seven who were killed in action.

Following his deployment, Miller returned to the 123rd STS as a mentor for the newest generation of operators. The events he experienced helped him to shape tactics, techniques and procedures for years to come.

"Keary was already a mature pararescueman before he went on that mission," McLane said. "But, when he returned, he really dedicated himself to improving our body armor, our equipment, our (tactics, techniques and procedures) when under fire—he was driven to be better, and to make his teammates better."

vital to the Air Force's efforts to combat terrorism in the Middle East. Those efforts range from Syria and Iraq to Afghanistan.

"The mission these Airmen do and the contributions they make are huge in the effort to win the war against Daesh while helping our partners build capacity providing security in their own countries," said Lt. Gen. Sam Cox, 18th Air Force commander. "What they do saves lives, every day, by making sure the right cargo and passengers get where they need to safely and on time."

Although there are multiple mobility forces assigned to AFCENT, the 816th EAS is one of the closest 18th AF assigned units supporting the fight in Iraq and Syria. As the only expeditionary squadron directly reporting to 18th AF, it draws on aircrews and maintainers from every C-17 unit to provide theater-direct delivery to the U.S. Central Command area of responsibility.

Put simply, the 816th EAS moves stuff.

And as the squadron's commander, Lt. Col. Steve Anderson, notes, they move a lot of stuff.

"We provide professional and safe combat airlift, bringing massive amounts of bullets, bombs, food, water, construction materials, vehicles, passengers, helicopters and other items to the U.S. and Coalition forces via air-land or airdrop mission sets," he said. "We fly multiple sorties a day, 365 days a year."

In 2016, the squadron flew more than 2,400 missions, moving nearly 102,000 tons of cargo and almost 120,000 passengers.

Capt. Andrew Stitt, a C-17 pilot deployed from Joint Base Charleston, South Carolina, said the capabilities the squadron brings to the fight make the unit essential to U.S. Central Command's operations.

"Some of the places where Coalition forces are located are landlocked and do not have channels to obtain the necessary supplies that they need to fight in their region," Stitt said. "Because we are able to go into those countries with a minimum amount of risk, we are able to directly deliver and fulfill a need for forces to sustain operations."

Brig. Gen. John Williams is the Air Forces Central Director of Mobility Operations. As the senior mobility officer in USCENTCOM's area of responsibility, he advises senior air component leadership on mobility issues. He said the 816th EAS provides a way around some of the transportation challenges forces in the region face.

How to Write An Ad

- Put yourself in the reader's shoes. What would you want to know about the product or service you are interested in? Be descriptive.
- Include a brand name, if available.
- List the features of your product or service. What makes it different from other items in the same category?
- Avoid abbreviations. They can abbreviate your results. (The Tailwind uses only standard abbreviations and requires proper punctuation.)
- Include the price.
- Include your phone number and the best times to call.

Copy Acceptance • Cancellations Payment • Adjustments

Copy Acceptance: The Tailwind reserves the right to classify all advertisements, to delete objectionable words or phrases or to edit or refuse any advertisement. Classified advertisements are accepted in good faith and must specify a bonafide offer. The Tailwind accepts only standard abbreviations and requires proper punctuation. Better results will be secured from ads that are easily read and understood.

Cancellations: Deadlines for ad cancellations are the same as those for placing ads. You will be billed only for the days your ad actually runs, unless it is a special rate package.

Payment: All ads are accepted subject to credit approval. (Some classifications must be pre-paid). The Tailwind may require payment in full before accepting new ad copy or require cash with copy.

Adjustments: Please check your ad the first day it is published. If you find an error, please call 427-6936 so we can make a correction and, if necessary, adjust your bill.

Deadlines

To place, correct or cancel an ad. To ensure publication, the advertiser must meet the current deadline schedule. In the event of a holiday, special section, or unforeseen circumstances, advance deadlines may be in effect.
